HELPING YOUR PET THROUGH ALLERGY SEASON

In this month's blog, we'll examine ways that you can help your pet through allergy season by identifying common allergens that impact pets both inside and outside of the home.

1. Flea allergies are the most common cause of allergic reactions in pets. A dog or cat that has fleas on its skin will scratch excessively. Because, the allergic reaction to the flea saliva causes extreme itching to occur. Flea bites can lead to itching skin, hair loss and hot spots that will not go away until the allergy is treated effectively.

2. Environmental allergens can cause allergic reactions in pets, as well. Pollen and dander in outdoor environments can lead to allergic reactions. Indoor environmental allergens can include perfume, household fumes and cigarette smoke.

3. Pets also are prone to food allergies, similar to humans. In dogs, more than half of all food allergies are caused by wheat, beef and dairy. In cats, nearly all food allergies are caused by dairy, fish and beef.
